Orientation Programme in Social Sciences for Women Research Scholars (22 to 26 July, 2019)

Sponsored by
Indian Council of Social Science Research, New Delhi

About the Programme

Social science research in India is passing through a transitional phase. The earlier methodological paradigm in social sciences developed by the western scholars and adapted by the social scientists in India are being questioned by the Indian scholars as the epistemological/methodological bases are not relevant enough to unfold complex facts of social reality prevailing in Indian social scene. It is therefore, need of the hour to analyse our traditional epistemological bases and think over alternative methodological ways to understand social reality in India.

In contemporary social science research scenario most of the macro level research is undertaken by quantitative methods keeping in view the vast geographical spread and large population of the country. On the other hand, micro issues are studied with the help of qualitative tools with very limited scope and their validity, reliability is very often questioned as it is very difficult to generalise their findings in a heterogeneous country like India. The need of the hour is to maintain a balance between macro and micro level research with appropriate methods to understand our Indian society in a better way.

It has been observed that many young researchers in India could not produce quality research output because they do not have the orientation to use relevant methods or do not have proper skill to analyse the data collected by them. The problem has further been aggravated by lack of opportunities for the social researchers to refine their methodological understanding and to get insight of new methodology in their respective fields. It has also been realised that women research scholars from educationally backward regions are needed to be given training to unfold social realities of their respective areas with a gender specific perspectives. Recognising this need, M.P. Institute of Social Science Research, Ujjain (MPISSR) is organizing an Orientation Programme in Social Sciences for Women Research Scholars (22 to 26 July, 2019) sponsored by Indian Council of Social Science Research, New Delhi.

The objectives of this programme are to provide a basic orientation on the various aspects of research methodology in social sciences. The training programme strives to highlight some salient philosophical and methodological issues emerging in social science research in India. The programme will also inculcate discussions on new areas of research to be undertaken related to women in Indian Society.
